I appreciate the initiative of Women's College Tinsukia — “earn while you learn”.
Entrepreneurship and Skill Development should be integral part of education under NEP.

College in Tinsukia starts 'earn while you learn' concept

BY ANUPAMA

DISPUR, June 12: In a groundbreaking initiative, Women's College and Cutting, Knitting Dress Making Centre at Women's College, Tinsukia, has introduced a unique initiative to help students earn while they learn. This initiative not only aims to provide high-quality education at a reasonable price but also promotes the empowering concept of "earn while you learn."

Under the expert guidance of Manasi Singh, instructor of the centre, this programme has garnered widespread attention and praise. Singh, an alumnus of Women's College, Tinsukia, has successfully integrated her professional expertise and personal commitment to her alma mater into this innovative project. Her leadership has been instrumental in assisting the students towards achieving both economic independence and development of practical skills.

Another dedicated participant of this initiative is Kajal Nathawat, a student of Women's College, Tinsukia. Her active involvement in the initiative not only demonstrates the institution's commitment to skill development but also highlights the positive impact of such programmes on students. Her participation exemplifies the programme's collaborative and inclusive nature, demonstrating how students can mutually support and benefit from the skills they are currently acquiring.

The students, meticulously crafted by the students, are a testament to their craftsmanship and dedication. This initiative is noteworthy for its dual purpose: providing affordable services to students and simultaneously offering participants a hands-on learning experience.

Through their involvement in this project, students are gaining valuable experience in garment making, a skill that can significantly enhance their future career prospects.

One of the major aspects of this initiative is its focus on making the services affordable without compromising on quality. The effectiveness of the programme is evident as all its details can access well-made, durable clothing by paying a reasonable fee and equally within the college community.

Moreover, the initiative fosters a sense of pride and accomplishment among the students involved in the learning process. They are not only learning a valuable skill but also contributing to their community, embodying the spirit of self-reliance and entrepreneurship. The experience is poised to enhance their curriculum vitae and provide them with a competitive edge in the job market after graduation.

Women's College and Cutting, Knitting Dress Making Centre's initiative is more than just a uniform-making project; it is a beacon of innovation in education, demonstrating how practical skills can be seamlessly integrated into the academic curriculum. By equipping students to "earn while you learn", Women's College, Tinsukia, is setting a precedent for other educational institutions to follow.
